Chief executive officer	Our market share has been falling so I would like suggestions on how we can grow PVS.
Business development director	My suggestion is for a joint venture with Best4Pets (B4P) to establish PVS clinics in some of their stores. It would be the first collaboration of this kind in our industry. B4P is the largest of Arland's two pet superstores, with stores outside town centres in the north and east of Arland. Although its low-cost strategy means it provides only a basic level of customer service, growth in customer numbers is exceeding the growth in pet ownership. B4P customers are attracted to its superstores by low prices, the extensive car parking available, the good public transport links allowing them to avoid the rising traffic congestion in town centres. An increasing number of its customers are looking for pet healthcare advice which B4P's staff do not have the vet training to provide. B4P is a very results-oriented organisation, focused on external success rather than internal satisfaction. Its organisational values are We Prioritise Pets, We Dare To Do Things Differently, We Deliver Results.
Chief medical officer	I have an alternative suggestion. I believe we should invest in technology to provide growth. Innovation was integral to our past success but seems to have been lacking from our culture in recent years.
Human resources director	I think we should change our strategic direction from being profit-focused to being more socially responsible. We would still achieve growth, but also benefit our stakeholders. For example, we could focus on staff health and wellbeing or support local animal charities. Due to the rise in pet numbers over recent years, we could visit schools to educate children on how to look after their pets. These activities would have a positive impact on the way in which our brand is perceived, and it may help us to achieve the Higher level SPP accreditation.
Chief operating officer	Our competitors continue to focus on profit, so why should we change? Donating to charities will reduce our profits and – more importantly – our dividends, rather than help us grow.
Chief finance officer	Our priority should be to ensure our internal processes are effective, so that they can support growth. I have received a worrying internal audit report about the credit control department. This department manages our Healthcare Plan which enables clients to defer the cost of their pet's treatments. This helps us retain clients. I will be investigating the issues raised and will update you at the next board meeting.
Chair	Colleagues, we are now out of time. Please present your growth strategy ideas in detail at the next board meeting.
